(In a telephone interview on 11/3/03, Matthew Felling, Media Director of the Center for Media and Public Affairs, explained that CMPA obtained relevant statistics by recording all of the national network evening broadcasts for the relevant years. CMPA technicians watched the recorded broadcasts and determined the actual length of each election story and each candidate soundbite. CMPA technicians input all data into a central computer database. Mr. Felling then analyzed the data from the computer, calculated the results, and wrote press releases based on those results.
